Garden Clues with Sue (Sue Harsh)

CLUE: Gosh, here we are in May, and as this edition goes to print, we are still enjoying warm sunny days. How amazing is this weather? It's really here, and this year, when you choose something for the garden. Lovely Cyclamens are always a great gift for anyone at this time of the year, as we go into the colder months, you can have them adding color to your living space. In nature, cyclamens grow in cool, humid environments, so when we have them inside, we need to keep them in a cooler position. If the temperature of your house is over 20 C during the day, then the cyclamen will start to die slowly. Temperatures that are too high will cause the plant to begin to yellow, and the flowers will fade rapidly. Cyclamens are sensitive to both over and under watering. Make sure the plant has excellent drainage with a potting medium that holds water well. Water your cyclamen plants only when the soil is dry to the touch, but do not leave the plant in this dry state for long that it shows visible signs of not being watered, such as drooping leaves and flowers. When you water the plant, water from below the leaves so that the water doesn't touch the stems or leaves. Watering the stems and leaves can cause them to rot. After a cyclamen blooms, it will go into a dormant state, allowing the leaves to die and stop watering the plant once you see the signs that the leaves are dying. Place the plant in a cool, somewhat dark place for two months, removing any dead foliage. After that, bring back below start watering process again, and soon, you'll have new leaves, and it will start to bloom again... or if that's not your size, you could just buy some new plants! Have a great and a very productive gardening week. Happy Mother's Day!
